Self Knowledge

How will you be able to identify potential career options if you don’t know who you are or what you want?

A critical part of career-decision making is assessing who you are: understanding your interests, values, skills, motivations, and preferences. With self-knowledge comes the ability to recognize career-related information that either fits you or does not. This information helps clarify your potential career paths and guides you through different life transitions.

The following self-assessment exercises are designed to aid with your self-reflection. You are strongly encouraged to complete one or more of the exercises and make an appointment with a career counselor to discuss. Contact the UCI Career Center at (949) 824-6881 to schedule an appointment. If you would like to explore further with standardized assessments, ask about the Strong Interest Inventory and the Myers Briggs Type Indicator.

Summarizing Your Skills

Review your Functional/Transferable Skills Checklist with your four favorite skill clusters and write a summarizing paragraph.

Example of a skills summary paragraph:

“I seek a job in which communicating both verbally and in writing is central. Specifically, I'm good at compiling information from a variety of sources into a final report form. I am better at writing factual rather than persuasive material. I enjoy explaining information to individuals or small groups. My organizing skills evident in preparing reports are also demonstrated in my ability to coordinate people and resources to complete a project. In addition to these primary skill areas, I am good at budgeting my time, setting priorities and attending to details.”

Try writing your skills summary in the space below:

Points to Consider:

1. Of the skills you have checked, what kinds of work activities, work environments or occupations can you name that would utilize those skills?

2. Which skills would you like to develop? How might you begin to acquire them?
